Work Breakdown Structure (WBS) in Project Management

According to the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK®), and the Practice Standard for Work Breakdown Structures – Second Edition from the Project Management Institute (PMI), the work breakdown structure can be used to effectively decompose the project scope, to improve estimating, to better control the project execution and to more accurately verify project completion.

Decomposition - Project Management Knowledge

Decomposition is an important technique used in WBS creation (Scope Management) and definition of activities (Time Management). In scope management, project deliverables are subdivided into smaller and more manageable components until the work and deliverables are defined to the work package level. This is called as decomposition.

Decomposition: Break down the work packages (the smallest unit in work breakdown structure) into activities. Understanding the activities in a project allows for a view into tasks and, thus, a greater understanding of day-to-day effort. Decomposition also reveals low-level deliverables.

Applying work breakdown structure to project lifecycle

The Work Breakdown Structure (WBS) is a widely applied tool in the field of project management which is defined as the hierarchical decomposition framework for presenting the work that needs to be executed by the team, in order to achieve the project objectives . Specifically, it creates the backbone of the project and provides a clear visual overview of the work to be completed.
