We would generally recommend that an ethnographic approach may be suitable for the early stages of a user-centred project that deals with a particularly complicated or critical design challenge. This is because ethnographic methods allow a particularly deep understanding of a design problem's domain, audience(s), processes, goals and context ...

Bing: The Interview An Ethnographic Approach

Ethnographic methods are a research approach where you look at people in their cultural setting, with the goal of producing a narrative account of that particular culture, against a theoretical backdrop. As part of this you will look at: Deeds done as well as words used; How they interact with one another, and with their social and cultural environment

Ethnographic Research: Types, Methods + [Question Examples]

If you do an opinion poll —which is not ethnographic interviewing— this is a particularly severe problem because there is not usually enough redundancy in answers for the bias to be evident. With opinion polls, intended for hundreds or thousands of respondents, it is possible to pretest alternate wordings of questions.
